PHILIPPINE FOREIGN COMMERCE IN THE CALENDAR YEAR 1908.

Commercial imports into the Philippines for the calendar year 1908, exclusive of Government Free Entries, amounted to $29,186,120, and exports to $32,601,072, with an excess in export values of $3,414,952. Reduced trade activity which has recently prevailed throughout the world characterizes the figures for the year, and import values were smaller by $1,267,690, while exports were $496,795 less than in 1907.

Imports of rice during American occupation have constituted a very large portion of the import trade of the islands, and in view of the fact that these foreign purchases are to supplement local shortage in production of a vital necessity of the people, and are more the measure of their misfortune than an indication of healthy trade activity, any accurate estimate of general commercial conditions during a given period requires the elimination of this large and abnormal element from the total. The following table gives the relation of rice to other imports and to the total during the ten complete years of American occupation:

Calendar Year.	Rice.	Other Imports.	Total.
1899.....	$ 3,523,652	$15,669,334	$19,192,986
1900.....	4,365,056	20,498,723	24,863,779
1901.....	5,108,341	25,054,130	30,162,471
1902.....	8,784,388	24,557,778	33,342,166
1903.....	12,552,382	21,259,002	33,811,384
1904.....	7,710,754	21,866,977	29,577,731
1905.....	6,745,975	23,304,575	30,050,550
1906.....	3,991,913	22,411,855	26,403,768
1907.....	4,166,744	26,287,066	30,453,810
1908.....	5,552,571	23,633,549	29,186,120

These figures show an unprecedented activity in 1907 in the general import trade exclusive of rice, and though a decline of more than two and a half millions appears in 1908 the figures for the year compare favorably with those of many years previous. It is, however, in the large increase of $1,385,827 in the value of rice imports, measuring as it does the local crop shortage, that the most unsatisfactory feature of the import trade for the year is to be found. Rice purchases had steadily declined since 1903 when, due to the exceptionally large quantity required and the high price paid, the value of this staple foodstuff amounted to over twelve and a half millions and made up more than a third of all imports, though high prices prevailing in 1907 resulted in a slightly increased value for a reduced quantity. In 1908, however, the high average price of the previous year has been maintained upon a very substantial increase in quantity, and the most hopeful feature of the rice situation has been a steady decline in prices from the exceptionally high point reached in the first quarter of the year. French East Indies supplied almost the whole of these imports as heretofore.

Opium presents another somewhat abnormal element, though of less importance, affecting the comparative value of the import totals, inasmuch as these imports in consequence of legislative action have ceased to figure in the returns. Importations of this drug prior to the adoption of restrictive measures reached an annual value of over seven hundred thousand dollars. Increased taxation of the traffic was succeeded by administrative restrictions and this in turn gave place to absolute prohibition by Congress of opium imports for other than medicinal purposes after March 1, 1908. The result has been that this large item of previous years, amounting to $446,049 in 1907, has entirely disappeared from the figures of 1908 and cannot be properly considered a factor of legitimate trade decline.

With the elimination of the abnormal features of rice and opium, a net reduction in the general import trade of $2,207,468 appears in the figures of 1908 as compared with those of the previous year. Among import items of considerable value substantial gains are recorded for coal and fresh beef, but these offset only to a slight degree reduced purchases of cotton goods, cattle, iron and steel, illuminating oil, wheat flour, and boots and shoes.

It is in imports of cotton and manufactures that the far greater portion of this reduction is to be found. This trade reached an exceptional value of $9,026,469 in the previous year but declined to $7,216,682 in 1908—a loss in value of $1,809,787. Most countries participating to any import extent in these imports shared in this decline. A notable exception, however, is to be found in the case of Japan, whose sales increased from $457,612 to $614,203 in the face of the general reduction. By rapid strides in the past three years Japanese textiles have won third rank in the cotton cloth trade of the islands, while Japanese yarns rank second. The heaviest declines in values are found under cotton cloths and cotton knit fabrics. In the reduced totals of the latter Spain's trade falls off from $626,875 to $252,426 and thus becomes a practically equal contributor with Germany, the only other important source of imports of knit goods. Cotton yarns were imported to the value of $1,287,549 and indicate increased activity in the local weaving industry in spite of the heavy stocking-up of the textile market in 1907. In the seven million dollar cotton trade, half was of British origin, while American goods were a remote second, and Japanese a close third.

Though the large and increasing beef trade is doubtless in some measure indicative of an improved standard of living, it is to be considered like rice imports as one of the measures of the island's misfortunes. The sweeping disaster of the rinderpest scourge of several years ago and the recurrence of epidemics throughout the islands since are large factors in the dependence on foreign beef supplies.

These beef imports assume two forms, one a refrigerated beef trade exclusively from Australia, and the other a cattle trade from the adjacent coasts of the China Sea, the proximity of which to the Philippine market for this class of cargo has thus far given this nearby source of supply an advantage with which Australia has not been able to successfully compete. While the cattle imports also include draft animals, these are not a very large feature of the total, and it may be considered a beef-on-the-hoof trade, chiefly for the supply of the slaughter house at Manila.

The aggregate value of refrigerated beef and cattle imports during the past year was $1,504,550, or an increase of $35,381. But the proportion has undergone a marked change; fresh beef imports more than doubled and made up nearly half the total, while the far more important cattle trade of previous years declined from a value of $1,119,638 in 1907 to $770,310. This change was coincident with the inauguration of rigid cattle inspection and quarantine regulations, based upon the view that the constantly recurring epidemics of cattle plague were due to infection from foreign sources. These restrictions not only had their bearing upon the changed character of the beef traded for the year and substitution of fresh beef for beef on the hoof, but also upon the source of supply. Investigation developed that the French methods of cattle inspection in Indo-China assured a much better guarantee of immunity from disease upon arrival in the islands than was found to be the case in Chinese cattle, and though China had heretofore practically monopolized the cattle trade the figures for 1908 show that of the reduced trade French East Indies contributed nearly half.

The wheat flour imports that for the first time exceeded a million dollars in value in 1907, amounted to $943,022 in 1908, a reduction of $98,834. This peculiarly American trade of earlier years, the United States under the disadvantages of distance and transportation has been steadily losing to Australia since 1904. In the past year, however, higher Australian prices have prevailed with reduced shipments, and the year's reduced total shows a value of $530,923 credited to United States and $411,639 to Australia, American wheat flour recovering the lead lost in the previous year.

A two million dollar iron and steel trade is recorded for 1908, which falls below the average and is $286,988 below the figures of the previous period. Of practically seventy per cent. of the total contributed by United States and United Kingdom the value credited to the former was $806,109 and to the latter $566,089. British products reached an exceptionally low value, but in the American trade a slight increase is shown in spite of the reduced total.

Imports of illuminating oil which reached the exceptionally large total of $859,278 in 1907 declined to $719,303 in 1908. The American product dominated the market with a value of $556,207, but imports from the Dutch East Indies, the only other source of any importance, slightly increased and amounted to $157,698.

Imports of coal increased from a value of $513,680 to $597,507 and were as in previous years almost exclusively from Australia. This increase is the more significant since during the past year active exploitation of local coal fields has taken place, and vessels engaged in the interisland trade have drawn upon this supply. Facilities for largely increasing the present domestic output are being installed, and the indications are that the local product will soon begin to appreciably affect the present importation.

Coffee and cocoa are both products of the Philippines, and the former some twenty years ago, before the advent of the coffee blight, was an important item of export, amounting to one and a half million dollars in value, but during American occupation they have figured as imports of steadily increasing value. Foreign purchases of coffee amounted to $165,795 in 1908, and cocoa to $229,647. British East Indies is the chief source of both these commodities and Dutch East Indies to a minor degree, though in the large increase in coffee of the past year the Java product begins to take a prominent place.

The boot and shoe trade for the year fell below the figures of 1907 by $68,715 and amounted to $351,034, of which the United States contributed $283,410. Spanish trade further declined from $82,417 to $53,456, and the year's figures still more confirm the supremacy of the American shoe in the Philippine market.

Low hemp prices completely dominate the export total of 1908, and a survey of the figures suggests a year little short of disastrous to this, the chief export industry and heretofore considered the most prosperous of the islands. So heavy was the shrinkage in value of this staple that though returns from sugar and copra far exceeded those of any previous year during the American period the net reduction in total export values reached nearly a half million dollars. The following table shows the quantities, value and annual prices of hemp exports from 1899:

Calendar Year.	Tons.	Value.	Price per Ton.
1899.....	69,048	$ 7,993,574	$116
1900.....	89,438	13,290,400	149
1901.....	124,257	15,976,640	129
1902.....	111,500	19,290,610	173
1903.....	137,752	22,000,588	160
1904.....	121,637	20,944,177	172
1905.....	128,383	21,757,344	169
1906.....	102,439	19,612,632	191
1907.....	115,395	19,689,493	171
1908.....	129,313	16,501,956	128

From the above it appears that though the quantity of hemp exported in 1908, amounting to 129,313 tons, exceeded that of any previous year but 1903, the average price marked the lowest level since 1899. The contrast between the average price of $172 per ton during the previous six years and $128 per ton in 1908 measures one aspect of the loss to the industry, while it explains a reduction of $3,387,537 in receipts from the staple, though fourteen thousand tons more were marketed than in 1907. Of the reduced value for the year, amounting to $16,501,956, the United States took $7,797,926, while $6,792,962 worth found a British market.

Philippine sugar was marketed to the extent of 142,448 tons during the year and under more favorable price conditions than during the previous period, resulting in a total value of $5,703,641, an increase of over a million and a half dollars. The average price was 1.8 cents as compared with 1.5 cents in 1907, and the shortage in the world supply brought the United States into the market on a larger scale than since the period of high prices in 1905. Of the total the American purchases were about a third, while the bulk of the remainder was taken by the Hongkong-Chinese market.

Copra like sugar was exported in 1908 in largely increased quantities, and though the price was materially less than that of the two previous years it still maintained its second rank in the value of Philippine exports with a total of $6,058,886, and added $1,274,735 to the previous year's record. France took about two-thirds, while shipments to Spain were valued at $729,300, and American purchases increased slightly over those of 1907 and amounted to $220,892. The related cocoanut oil industry took foremost place among exports of minor importance with a value of $342,280 and found its largest market in the United States.

Exports of leaf tobacco amounted to $1,708,756 with a slight improvement in price and increase in quantity over those of 1907. Spain as heretofore was the largest purchaser with slightly over a million dollars worth, while Austria-Hungary took the larger part of the remainder.

Manufactured tobacco exports were valued at $1,117,286, and were slightly less than in 1907, chiefly in consequence of smaller sales of cigarettes. Of these widely distributed exports the Hongkong-Chinese market took a somewhat reduced but still leading value, while Australia and British East Indies increased their purchases, and the United States figured nominally to the extent of $18,748.

Philippine products of minor importance figuring in the export trade were generally characterized by reduced values. The case of cocoanut oil, previously referred to, was in fact the only noteworthy instance to the contrary. Relatively heavy reductions figured in maguey, miscellaneous vegetable fibers, hats, ilang-ilang oil, and to a less extent in other commodities.

With this review of the leading features of Philippine commerce for 1908 carried into detail, the general conclusion seems to be warranted that in spite of the seemingly unfavorable conditions, measured by import returns of 1907, the figures compare favorably with the average of recent years, and that the exceptional import activity of that period would in fact explain even a greater reduction in purchases than is found in the figures of 1908. In the export trade increased quantities in all of the four great staples of the islands indicate an increasing industrial activity, but the two dominating factors in the year's trade—increased imports of rice and the low price of hemp—are not to be minimized and have heavily offset an otherwise satisfactory commercial condition.

Imports from the United States in 1908 were valued at $5,101,836 as compared with $5,067,538 in the previous year. The strength of the American position in the Philippine market rests upon the great staples, iron and steel, cotton and manufactures, wheat flour, and illuminating oil. These comprise more than half the total, but the remainder is made up of a more widely diversified class of articles than is to be met with in purchases from any other country. The American cotton trade shows a considerable falling off in the reduced total, and amounted to only $662,033. These imports reached an exceptional value of over a million dollars in the previous year and the absorption of abnormal stocks is thought to explain the seemingly reduced demand. The value of American illuminating oil was also less by $79,527, but substantial increases in flour, iron and steel, lumber, and other items more than compensated for these losses. Exports to the United States were to a slightly greater value and amounted to $10,450,755, of which $7,797,926 was for hemp and $1,966,166 for sugar. An increased quantity of nine thousand tons of hemp found an American market on the basis of lower prices at a reduction of a million and a half dollars in value as compared with 1907, but increased purchases of Philippine sugar about equaled this difference, while copra and cocoanut oil, amounting to $220,892 and $205,052 respectively were the only other products worthy of mention to find an American market.

FREE-ENTRY RAILWAY SUPPLIES.

Supplies granted free entry in connection with the construction of the railway systems of the Philippines have not been included in the regular commercial returns owing to their exceptional character, their large proportions and their limited period of entry. In the calendar year 1907, which practically covered the first year of railway construction under the free-entry concession, these imports amounted to $2,455,938, and in the year just closed they were valued at $1,747,312. The following table gives the distribution of these imports according to railway system and country of origin during the past two years of active operations.

GENERAL STATEMENT OF PHILIPPINE COMMERCE FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1909.

The value of both Philippine imports and exports fell somewhat below the average of recent fiscal years. Imports amounted to $27,792,397 and were $3,125,960 less than in 1908, while the export total of $30,993,563 was smaller by $1,823,004. The uncertainty of pending tariff legislation toward the close of the year affected the export total to some extent in consequence of the important bearing of that legislation on sugar exports, but in the falling off of import values tariff disturbance of trade appears to have figured to no important degree, and the general condition as indicated by the year's figures is to be explained rather by the widespread commercial depression from which the world is just recovering.

Of the reduced import value more than half is to be found in the item of rice, and this, taken as a measure of increased local production and increased capacity on the part of the islands to supply their staple foodstuff, must be considered a favorable feature of the year's figures. Foreign rice—almost wholly from the French East Indies—was purchased to the value of $4,250,223, or $1,611,033 less than in 1908. There was a substantial reduction in quantity, but reduced prices were also an important factor. The exceptionally high prices that prevailed during 1908 steadily declined throughout 1909 to an exceptionally low figure toward the end with an average somewhat below that of recent years. With the decline of rice imports, wheat flour has continued to find increasing favor as a foodstuff, and 291,680 barrels were imported as compared with 256,055 barrels in 1908, with an increased value of $127,752. For the past two years these imports have exceeded a million dollars in value, and a review of this trade during American occupation shows a notably growing consumption of the great occidental staple. Flour is practically all supplied by the United States and Australasia, and the American product made up considerably more than half of the year's purchases.

In the cotton trade of the islands for the year, amounting to $6,944,978, there was a reduction of $1,066,856 as compared with 1908. All the leading classes of these imports figured with reduced totals, and all the leading countries in this trade shared in the general decline except Japan, which with steadily increasing sales in previous years, passed all competitors in 1909 and took second rank in this pre-eminently British trade. These imports from the United Kingdom amounted to $3,499,452, as compared with $4,161,487 in 1908, purchases from Japan increased from $515,615 to $662,019, while those from the United States declined from $685,919 to $590,635. The whole fiber and textile trade of the islands was in accord with the downward trend of cotton, and there were reduced purchases of other vegetable fibers as well as of silk and wool.

The iron and steel trade was smaller by $231,232, but imports from the United States slightly increased, amounted to $818,991 of the total of $1,933,475, and took a conspicuously foremost place in the smaller market, while the United Kingdom and Germany, the only other competitors of any importance, bore the chief part of the year's decline. In other branches of the island's trade, however, more exclusively American, the United States did not fare so well. Imports of illuminating oil declined from $806,112 to $614,334 with heavy reductions in consignments from the United States, while Sumatra oil found an increased sale, and, with a value of $227,642, presented the most serious competition to the great American export since the disappearance of Russian oil from the Philippine market. The American shoe has steadily gained favor and established such a prominent place that the large reduction of $177,294 in the import value of shoes fell heavily on the United States, while a shrinkage of $60,214 in purchases of canned salmon was almost entirely a loss to the American exporter.

Imports of coal declined in value from $567,220 to $461,465, though prices in the Australian market, from which the supply chiefly comes, averaged substantially the same. Recent active exploitation of Philippine coal mines presents a factor of growing importance in connection with declines in this trade. Cement, supplied chiefly by Hongkong, was imported to the value of $247,425, or $83,718 less than in the previous year. Opium imports, which, under restrictive measures had declined from three-quarters of a million annually to $143,670 in 1908, practically disappeared from the islands' trade in 1909. Alcoholic liquors on the other hand increased $67,604 in value and amounted to $593,633.

A notable exception to the general reduction in the year's trade was in the group of meat and dairy products. In all of the leading items of this group increased import values were reported. Fresh beef reached the unprecedented figure of $852,461, or $372,904 more than in 1908. This increase was, however, offset in large measure by a three hundred thousand dollar decline in cattle imports, co-incident with active quarantine and restrictive measures against the importation of diseased and infected animals. The Chinese cattle trade suffered heavily, while Australasia profited by the increased demand for refrigerated meat and supplied practically all of the fresh beef as well as substantially increased imports of fresh pork and mutton. There was also a marked growth in the butter trade, chiefly supplied by Australasia and Denmark as heretofore, while the steadily increasing demand for condensed milk continued and reached a value of $406,607, of which the United Kingdom contributed $235,558 and the United States $97,555.

The total value of exports for the year was less than for any fiscal period since 1904, and in the net reduction of $1,823,004 as compared with the figures of 1908, both the great hemp and sugar industries figured largely, exports of copra substantially increased, and tobacco made slight gains, while in the miscellaneous group of minor products there was a very general decline in values.

The worst feature in the export trade was the low price of Manila hemp. The market conditions of this great staple—exclusively the product of the Philippines—were characterized by heavy shipments and steadily declining prices throughout the year. Export production reached the highest figure since American occupation, while prices averaged the lowest since 1899. The year opened with the abnormally low average export price of $120 per ton, and with a generally downward tendency closed at approximately $100. The total exports for the year were 147,621 tons, or 33,618 tons more than for the previous year, and yet this greatly increased quantity was marketed at a value $1,478,181 less than that received for the exports of 1908.

Hemp made up a reduced proportion of the total export trade, but still constituted slightly more than half.

The United States and the United Kingdom were purchasers as heretofore of the great bulk of the fibre, of which 77,958 tons were shipped to the United States and 54,533 tons found a British market. The American manufacturer appropriated most of the heavy increase for the year and was a purchaser of larger quantities than ever before. This fact of larger shipments to the United States taken in conjunction with reduced American purchases of sisal gives statistical confirmation to trade statements that the Philippine fibre on the basis of lower prices is finding favor with the American manufacturer to the displacement of the inferior Mexican fiber.

Exports of sugar in 1909 amounted to 110,604 tons, a reduction of 38,718 tons and of $1,291,328 in value, as compared with those of 1908. These figures are not, however, so significant of a definite loss as the reduced value of hemp. The smaller quantity of sugar marketed during the year was at a somewhat higher average price than that of 1908, while fiscal year returns are not a very trustworthy index to production in the sugar industry and are subject to wide fluctuations. The crop or campaign year in the Philippines is much more nearly coincident with the calendar year, while the fiscal period, ending in the midst of the active export of the crop, is subject to much irregularity in consequence of early or late marketing. In 1909 this condition was further emphasized by the tariff legislation pending at the close of the fiscal period providing for the free admission of Philippine sugar into the United States, and the tendency to accumulate and hold back stocks awaiting Congressional action. Estimates for 1909 have pointed to a normal crop, while exports from January to June were only 71,714 tons as compared with 103,558 tons during the same period of the previous year. Of the total sugar exports for the fiscal year the China-Hongkong market took 86,435 tons, or slightly more than in 1908. Exports to the United States were 20,948 tons with delayed shipments awaiting free trade legislation yet to be accounted for.

Copra in 1909 further confirmed its increasing importance as an export of the Philippines and ranked second only to hemp with a value of $6,657,740. The average price was slightly less than in 1908, but the quantity increased from 75,211 tons to 103,896 tons, with an increased value of $1,196,060. The greater part of it found a French market as in the past. Spain continued the leading purchaser of secondary importance, but Belgium assumed a new prominence in the trade and was credited with $634,288 worth. Exports to the United States were relatively unimportant, and though of the increased production American purchases amounted to $287,484 as compared with $228,565 in 1908, the growing market of the United States is still chiefly supplied from other sources.

Exports of tobacco in its various forms amounted to $2,792,253. The value of the cigar trade was $1,083,702 or almost the same as in 1908, but leaf exports in consequence of a slight increase both in quantity and average price produced $80,646 more, and amounted to $1,662,269. Half of the cigar exports found a nearby Oriental market in China and in the two great Eastern distributing centers, Hongkong and Singapore, while Australasia and the United Kingdom were the other leading purchasers. Leaf tobacco was taken by Spain to the value of $1,065,533, and most of the remainder found a market in Austria-Hungary, Netherlands, and France. No leaf tobacco was shipped to the United States, but cigars figured to the value of $43,818. The bulk of these left the islands in the months of May and June, and were obviously shipments made in contemplation of free entry under the then pending tariff legislation.

Among minor exports there was a substantial increase in the quantity of maguey, but the condition of the cordage fibre market that figured so disastrously in the case of hemp was reflected also in the price of this staple and there was only a nominal increase in the value of the year's trade. In the value of cocoanut oil exported there was a reduction of $105,153. This trade was coincident with the establishment of a factory at Manila, and reached a value of over a quarter of a million dollars in 1908. With the destruction of the plant by fire during the past year these exports ceased. The making of hats is a local industry of some export importance, and this trade of $168,522 was about the same as in 1908, but other exports of minor importance declined very generally in value.

The share of the United States in the import trade of the islands amounted to $4,691,770, and was $387,717 less than in 1908. Nearly half of the year's total was made up of leather and iron and steel, and of the two great American export staples, wheat flour and illuminating oil, while the balance was of a widely diversified character. American goods constituted seventeen per cent. of the total value of Philippine imports, and there was a relatively insignificant increase over the proportion of the previous year. That under the free trade conditions inaugurated by the new tariff of August 5, 1909, there will be a considerable increase in the volume of American shipments is to be expected, but to what extent the Philippine market will be supplied by the United States will depend upon how far the tariff differential will go toward compensating for the higher cost of American production in competition with other countries intrenched in the trade, and the extent to which the American manufacturer will press his opportunity and adapt his products to the native tastes and requirements.

Of the year's exports the United States took only a slightly smaller value than in 1908, and was credited with $10,215,331, or a third of the total. The large American demand for hemp has made the United States a good customer of the islands in the past, while limited free entry of Philippine sugar and tobacco under the new tariff provides a much improved market for these staples, and free admission of other commodities furnishes a new stimulus to their production. A new era of activity and an increased volume of trade is, therefore, to be expected with the lapse of the restraining clause of the treaty of Paris and the establishment of practically unrestricted commercial conditions between the two countries.

PHILIPPINE FOREIGN COMMERCE IN THE CALENDAR YEAR 1909.

Customs returns for the calendar year show a very satisfactory condition of the foreign commerce of the islands. The import trade indicates a recovery from the effects of the general depression which manifested itself in the returns of 1908, while exports reached a value in excess of any previous year in the history of the islands.

The total value of imports was $31,084,419 as compared with $29,186,120 in 1908, and to this increase of $1,898,299 may be added a reduced value of three-quarters of a million dollars in purchases of foreign rice spent otherwise to swell the general import trade. Export values increased from $32,601,072 to $34,924,337—an increase of $2,323,265, which is almost wholly found under the two important staples copra and cigars.

A commercial event of far-reaching importance to the islands was the passage of legislation by Congress providing for limited free trade between the United States and the Philippines. This legislation became effective August 6, 1909, and heavy withdrawals from warehouse of American goods entitled to free entry were a striking feature of that month's returns. In the following tabulation of imports by months during 1909 is shown the increasing volume of purchases of American goods and their proportion to the total during the first few months of free trade:

The sugar crop was to a considerable extent marketed prior to the passage of free trade, but stocks held in anticipation served to credit the United States with the largest consignments yet made in any year, and practically all exports following the passage of the legislation found an American market. It is in the cigar industry, however, that the most immediate and conspicuous results of free trade in the welfare of the islands is to be found. These exports increased from a nominal value of about a million dollars annually to $1,754,529, and the following table of cigar exports by months for 1909 will serve to show the unprecedented activity in the industry called forth during the closing months of the year to meet the new and heavy demands of the American market in addition to the old and regular trade of other countries:

Imports from the United States under the stimulus of free trade made up the great bulk of increase in the import total for the year; but other countries shared to a less degree—notably in the case of France, Spain, China, Japan, Dutch East Indies, and Australasia. The volume of British and German trade remained substantially the same, while Switzerland suffered a decline of some importance, and the totals of French East Indies and Siam were affected by the reduced values in rice. Apart from the stimulus given to imports from the United States by free trade, a heavy increase is shown for imports from other countries in certain lines of goods in consequence of the passage of a new tariff affecting countries other than the United States, which became effective October 5, 1909.

Though largely a readjustment of the inequalities of the tariff of 1905, it carried substantially increased rates in a number of schedules, and this, under the opportunity given for stocking up in advance of the new rates becoming effective, served to stimulate importation to an appreciable degree in schedules subject to marked increase.

Rice imports declined in value to $4,794,009, and $758,562 less was spent abroad for this staple foodstuff than in 1908, not, however, in consequence of the increased local supply, but of exceptionally low prices. As a matter of fact, the quantity imported was the largest in the past four years and was exceptionally heavy during the latter half of the year. Wheat flour at the same time continues to find a growing market in the islands and reached more than a million dollars in value in the past year, of which imports to the value of $698,263 were from the United States, with Australasia a close second in the trade. American oats, however, which have heretofore to a large measure supplied the demand, lost the market to Australasia in 1909.

The cotton trade of $7,194,680 was of substantially the same value as in the previous year. Purchases of yarn and thread declined materially, while those of knit goods increased, and Spain recovered the lead previously held over Germany, the only other contributor of any importance in these manufactures. Cotton cloths figured to the value of $4,796,444, with only a nominal increase. British goods declined in value, but still made up over fifty per cent of the total. Swiss trade was also substantially smaller, while Japanese textiles show a heavy increase in a field where they have been steadily establishing themselves for several years past. Imports of cotton cloths from the United States for the year increased in value $180,671, and amounted to $716,147. The effect of free trade on these American goods and their increasing proportion to the total is shown in the following table giving the trade for the year by months:

The two million dollar iron and steel trade of 1908 increased to $2,396,076, of which half was of American origin, and the increased trade for the year was furnished by the American exporter, British values remaining practically the same and amounting to twenty-five per cent of the increased total.

Cattle were imported to a value of $853,427, and in the increased total for the year the Chinese trade recovered some of its former lead lost in consequence of disease and strict Philippine quarantine regulations prevailing in the previous year, but French East Indies, with a value of $209,239, was still an important source of supply.

Australian refrigerated beef was again imported to the value of three-quarters of a million dollars and still has no competitor in this field. The United States made slight gains in the group of meat and dairy products, but in this total, aggregating over two million dollars, with Australia in control of the fresh-meat and butter trade, China the chief source of lard and cured hog products, and British condensed milk foremost in the market, the United States furnishes only a little more than ten per cent, though several items are of important American production and should become of interest under free-trade conditions.

Illuminating oil for the first time exceeded a million dollars in value, with seventy-five per cent from the United States and the balance from Dutch East Indies. A three hundred thousand dollar cement trade was as in 1908 chiefly from Hongkong, but another near-by source has been found in French East Indies, which figures for the first time, though only to a relatively small value. Refined sugar from Hongkong is also a product that has dominated the market of the islands for several years, and it makes up almost the whole of the one hundred and fifty thousand dollar total of 1909. A large part of this was imported toward the end of the year and paid the relatively high rate of duty adopted from the United States tariff. Imports of American refined sugar figured to a value of only $1,451.

In the increased total of the export trade for the year the largest gains were in the copra and cigar industries. Hemp values slightly increased, while leaf tobacco and sugar yielded smaller returns. Among minor articles increased export activity figured in the hat industry and in shipments of maguey fiber. Ilang-ilang oil sales declined, while exports of coconut oil, which had become an item of some importance in 1908, disappeared from the returns in consequence of the burning of the factory that was building up this export industry.

Foreign sales of hemp only slightly improved on the low level of value established in 1908, and amounted to but $16,896,000 in comparison with a trade that exceeded twenty million dollars in the years 1903, 1904, and 1905. The export quantity, however, far exceeded that of any previous year and amounted to 165,299 tons. Prices ruled very low throughout the year, and the average of $102 per ton is in striking contrast with that of $191 in 1906, being much the lowest experienced by the industry since American occupation. In the following table is shown the close relation between heavily increasing production and declining prices that has been the history of the industry in recent years:

CALENDAR YEAR.	HEMP EXPORTS.
	Tons.	Values.	Prices.
1906.....	102,439	$19,612,632	$191
1907.....	115,395	19,689,493	171
1908.....	129,313	16,501,956	128
1909.....	165,299	16,896,000	102

British purchases have remained fairly constant in quantity in the face of increasing production, and amounted to 51,566 tons in 1909, while the United States market absorbed the increase and took 99,928 tons. With the decline in price American cordage manufacturers have increased its use for purposes to which inferior fibers were previously devoted.

Total exports of sugar were 127,284 tons, as compared with 142,448 in 1908, which was the banner year of American occupation. Improved prices failed to compensate entirely for the reduced quantity marketed and $5,608,287, the value received, was slightly less than that of the previous year. During the first seven months 81,537 tons were exported, and the smaller portion left to be marketed subject to free trade conditions was to a very large extent shipped to the United States, and obtained a tariff advantage of slightly over a cent a pound in comparison with the average paid on the dutiable Philippine sugar of previous years. The upward movement in world prices throughout the year was generally shown in the Philippine market, and in the closing five months averaged 2.3 cents, or an average of about half a cent a pound over the earlier period. Total American purchases were 52,234 tons, and the remaining 75,050 tons was taken almost exclusively by the China-Hongkong market.

Of the great export industries of the islands copra is the youngest, and the returns for 1909 show further increase in the production of this staple. Export quantities increased from 95,594 tons to 107,310 tons, and this together with advancing prices during the year resulted in an increase of $1,613,979, and a record value of $7,672,865, superseding sugar in importance and ranking second only to hemp. France was the leading purchaser, as heretofore, and took more than half, while Germany and Spain were other markets of note. Consignments to the United States increased in value from $220,892 to $422,178.

Exports of unmanufactured tobacco amounted to 20,976,743 pounds, valued at $1,536,344. Both quantity and value were materially less than in 1908, and in fact were the lowest since 1905. The price, however, was the highest of recent years, and the average of 7.3 cents was a half cent above that of 1908. The heretofore large Spanish demand for Philippine leaf suffered but slightly in the reduced total, and in consequence of better prices amounted to $1,129,929—the largest sum paid by Spain for this staple in the past decade. Austria-Hungary, however, the most prominent minor buyer for several years past, materially curtailed purchases. The free trade concession of an American market to Philippine leaf was not taken advantage of to any extent, as shipments to the United States amounted to but 12,172 pounds.

In exports of Manila cigars the trade of previous years has been characterized by much uniformity, with an average of about one hundred and ten million, valued at slightly in excess of a million dollars, with an average price somewhat above $9 per thousand. That this trade should have increased in 1909 to 151,457,000, valued at $1,754,529, though only five months of free trade with the United States figured in the result, is an indication of the importance of the legislation to this foremost export manufacturing industry of the islands. A point of interest in the figures is the fact that though there have been minor fluctuations in the trade distribution, export quantities to countries other than the United States remained in the aggregate about up to the standard of previous years, and the large demand of the practically new market found in the United States has been cared for without any loss of old patronage.

The small American purchases of the Philippine product in former years were of a relatively high-priced cigar as compared with the large oriental consumption and exports to other countries. Under free-trade conditions this has continued, while there has been an appreciable decline in the price of purchases for other markets, as will be seen from the following comparative data covering the free-trade period:

COUNTRIES.	CIGAR EXPORTS.
	AUGUST-DECEMBER.

The Manila cigar is new to the American market and the figures cover the experimental stage of its introduction, but in as far as a recent monthly average of about eight millions may serve as a basis for estimate it is probable that the year's exports will not exceed two-thirds of the one hundred and fifty millions granted free entry by Congress. Shipments to Hawaii are not included in the figures given for the United States, but that the Philippine cigar has also found favor there under free trade is evidenced by exports increasing from a value of only $1,925 in 1908 to $56,597 in 1909.

Another local manufacture of some export importance is that of hats, which found a foreign market to the value of $239,090 in 1909. American purchases have figured to some extent in the past under an import duty of twenty-six per cent. Under free trade, shipments appreciably increased and amounted to $68,052. In the distinctive local weaves of fancy textiles for which the islands are noted there is also to be mentioned increased recent interest in the American market.

A further point of interest as a result of the new conditions appears in the fact that while there was a decline in imports of lumber, there was an increase in export values, destined chiefly for the United States. The local saw-mill industry shows increasing activity, and though exports are yet too small to be of much importance as a trade item, in view of the growing anxiety manifested in the United States with regard to its future lumber and timber supply, the small shipments recently made to the American market serve to suggest the enormous lumbering possibilities of the islands as an asset of mutual importance to the countries.

IMPORTS FROM THE UNITED STATES INTO THE PHILIPPINES UNDER FREE TRADE.

The following tabulation shows in detail, according to commodities, practically five months of free admission of American goods into the islands, in comparison with the same period of 1908, when they were subject to the same rates of duty as imports from other countries. The value of imports from all countries is given, as well as the amount and proportion furnished by the United States, while in the last column is shown the ad valorem rates—actual or computed—paid upon imports from other countries under the new tariff which went into effect October 5, 1909. It appears from these figures that while total imports increased in value twenty-four per cent over those of the closing five months of 1908, imports from the United States under the stimulus of free trade increased eighty-two per cent. The average ad valorem yield on all dutiable imports under the new tariff, based on the brief period covered, is twenty-five per cent, and a review of the table in detail serves to show in what branches of the import trade of the islands the American exporter is already established, what progress he has thus far made under free trade, and what advantage he now enjoys from the new legislation over the exporters of other countries for the introduction of classes of American goods heretofore little known in the Philippine market.

GENERAL STATEMENT OF PHILIPPINE COMMERCE FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1910.

The commercial returns for the fiscal year 1910, in comparison with those of 1909, may be roughly considered as showing the effect of the tariff legislation of August 5, 1909, by which free trade subject to certain limitations was extended to the islands. Both imports and exports in the first year reached an unprecedented figure. Imports were to the value of $37,067,630, as compared with $27,792,397 in 1909, while exports increased from $30,993,563 to $39,864,169.

This large and evenly divided increase of eighteen million dollars in the aggregate trade value for the year is to an extent discounted by the fact that the recent commercial depression throughout the world was still felt in the Philippines in 1909, making the figures abnormally low, while the imports of 1910 were somewhat affected by the withdrawal under the present tariff of the free-entry privilege previously extended to government supplies. The net result of the year, however, is ample to show that the establishment of free commercial relations between the two countries marks a new era in the material development of the islands.

In the country distribution of the import total for the year the United States for the first time took foremost rank, with a trade of $10,775,301, almost doubling that of the United Kingdom and the French East Indies, the only two other countries with an import value in excess of five millions. The leading European countries made only nominal gains. A larger demand for rice was the ruling factor in a million-dollar improvement in the trade of the French East Indies, while the Japanese total increased to a somewhat smaller extent as the result of a growing cotton trade and large sales of coal.

Of the total value of imports, about two-thirds is found under the following great staples, given in the order of their relative importance: Cotton, rice, iron and steel, meat and dairy products, wheat flour, illuminating oil, coal, and cattle. The cotton trade alone amounted to $8,522,307, an increase of a million and a half over the low value of 1909. The increased volume of these imports credited to the United States is one of the most notable results of the operation of free trade, and American goods made up practically the whole of the increased value for the year, a general reduction in sales by all leading European countries as well as British India being offset by larger imports from Japan and China.

A raw-cotton trade of $77,854 was below the average of recent years, and, as heretofore, was all of American origin. On the other hand, a twelve-hundred-thousand-dollar yarn and thread value shows a recovery from the decline of 1909, but a tariff advantage of 15 per cent on yarn and 25 per cent on thread has not to any extent resulted in the American exporter entering the market. Values from the United States were only nominal, while the United Kingdom continued to furnish the bulk of imports, with Japan and Switzerland the other leading sources.

In the cotton-cloth trade, however, which makes up 70 per cent of the cotton total for the year, the operation of the tariff advantage is well defined, and the following table, giving these imports by quarters for the past two years, shows both the condition prior to free trade and the steady and rapid increase in imports from the United States that has followed:

In this textile trade the British have for the first time met with competition of any importance, and imports from the United Kingdom, amounting to

$2,544,210, fell below half the total—a proportion it has considerably exceeded in previous years. The British loss for the year was the largest, though in the relatively small trade of Switzerland and British India the decline was proportionally greater. On the other hand, imports from China were larger, and Japanese textiles, which have been growing steadily in favor for several years past, substantially increased in value and amounted to $585,952.

Knit goods were imported to the extent of three-quarters of a million dollars, with nearly half from Spain and the bulk of the remainder from Germany. The tariff advantage ranging from 25 to 35 per cent was followed by increased imports from the United States, but they amounted to only $21,503 in this large trade. Japan, however, shows a marked increase, and consignments have steadily grown from $1,549 in 1906 to $76,277 in 1910. A hundred-thousand-dollar value in tulles and laces, as heretofore, was chiefly British, while a wearing apparel total of $103,528 was more of American manufacture than in the past.

Imports of rice amounted to $5,321,962, or an increase of more than a million dollars over the figures of 1909. The increase in quantity was the largest since 1905, but the average price was the lowest in the past decade, and French East Indies continued to supply practically the entire market.

Though the large sums spent abroad to supplement the local production of this staple foodstuff are now somewhat less than formerly, the tendency of considerable importations of rice to continue from year to year suggests the probability of an economic condition resulting from increased wages and the industrial reorganization taking place under American occupation. Local rice production as at present carried on seems to offer but slight inducement to supply the market to the exclusion of the cheaply produced Asiatic staple even with the aid of a substantial duty. To meet this condition discretion was given to the Insular Government under the new tariff to extend a still further degree of protection to the local producer, but thus far the application of the higher rate has not been found expedient.

A foodstuff of subordinate but growing importance is wheat flour, which in 1910 reached a value of $1,534,442, of which $1,098,823 worth was from the United States. The considerable increase of the year was made up of the American product, which also, to some extent, reduced the Australian total of the previous year. For some time past Australian flour has been an active competitor for this market, but with a tariff advantage of 47 cents per 100 kilos in favor of the American the United States should supply this growing Philippine demand for the occidental foodstuff.

Under the general title of meat and dairy products is a trade amounting to $2,377,466, in which the United States has improved the record of previous years, but shows a value of only $333,298. The leading items under this group are fresh beef, condensed milk, lard, and bacon, hams, and shoulders. But with all of these except condensed milk products of the United States of large export value, American fresh beef is unknown to the trade, and American hog products have thus far been unable to compete with the supply coming from China. In view of the high price and declining exports of American beef it is doubtful whether the advantage conferred by the tariff will lead to successful competition with the well-organized industry and shipping facilities of Australia, but in the case of hog products the higher rate suggests greater possibilities.

The inadequacy of the local cattle supply for both draft and food purposes has been one of the handicaps of the American administration, and the trend of the import trade in recent years gives little indication of improved conditions. Fresh beef was imported to the value of $808,546 in the past year, and an item of $16,439 credited to China is interesting as the most important competition that has appeared in imports heretofore almost exclusively from Australia. Imports of cattle were valued at $871,966 against $755,772 in 1909, and this sum also entered largely into the fresh-beef supply through local slaughter.

The use of condensed milk in the islands shows a uniform and almost uninterrupted annual increase from a value of $97,389 in 1901 to $475,882 in 1910. The United States has been a competitor throughout with the United Kingdom for this trade, and in 1905 the proportions were not widely different. In succeeding years, however, the British product has met most of the increasing demand, and in 1910 imports from the United States were valued at $116,425, against $268,883 from the United Kingdom, with relatively small contributions from Norway and Switzerland. The effect of the 10 per cent tariff advantage in this growing trade has not been conspicuous thus far.

In imports of iron and steel a value of $3,305,701 was recorded, and the large increase of $1,372,226 was credited almost wholly to the American product, which reached a value of $1,970,490. British iron and steel amounted to $701,211, against $518,196 in 1909, while Germany, the only other source of much importance, furnished a somewhat reduced value of $354,173. The most striking items in this larger trade for the year were rails, imported almost entirely from the United States under a tariff advantage of 40 cents per 100 kilos; machinery, which was more than ever of American origin; and pipes and fittings chiefly supplied by the United Kingdom.

A very material reduction was made by the new tariff in the import duty on illuminating oil, and this trade almost doubled in value. American oil amounted to $942,734, furnishing practically the entire market total of $1,142,250. With the disappearance of the Russian product as an important factor some years since, Sumatra oil entered into competition with the American, but in the increased imports of 1910 the proportion from the Dutch East Indies was smaller than in the previous year.

The coal trade for 1910 was characterized by increased volume and change in source. Imports from Australia amounted to $473,773, from Japan $411,557, while Borneo coal was an increasing but minor factor in the trade. Under the tariff advantage of 25 cents a metric ton there were no commercial imports from the United States.

Among other imports of less importance, but in which the larger values for the year were furnished by the United States, there may be mentioned carriages and other vehicles, leather as well as boots and shoes, paints, patent medicines, and cement. The growing demand for cement was heretofore very largely supplied by the nearby Hongkong product and the United States figured only to a nominal extent. Under the new tariff there is a duty of 16 cents per 100 kilos, and of total imports to the value of $416,815 in 1910, those from the United States amounted to $103,078. Refined sugar, however, continued to come from Hongkong under the extension of the higher United States tariff rate to the islands, and only $4,063 worth of American origin figured in the total of $185,648 for the year.

In the course of the tariff hearings in connection with free trade reference was made to the inadequate supply of local wrapper leaf to meet the requirements of the cigar industry and the view was expressed that the United States product might be made to meet this need. In the past there has been a regular importation of a relatively high grade leaf, and coincident with the greatly increased cigar production and heavy exports to the United States there has been a much larger showing in these imports of which American leaf made up the greater part in 1910 but did not figure at all in 1909. Total imports of tobacco leaf for the year were 99,981 pounds, valued at $73,246, of which 71,500 pounds, valued at $57,136, were from the United States.

In the export trade the leading place, heretofore held by the United States in consequence of the large American demand for hemp, became more pronounced in 1910 by heavy purchases also of sugar and cigars under free trade. Of total exports amounting to $39,864,169, shipments to the United States were to the value of $18,741,771, or 47 per cent, as compared with $10,215,331, or 33 per cent, in 1909. Shipments to the important China-Hongkong market were smaller by two million dollars, chiefly as a result of the diversion of the sugar trade to the United States, while the totals of France and Germany show material gains, due to increased activity in the copra market. British purchases were almost identical in value with those of 1909, but second place in the export trade of the islands, heretofore held by the United Kingdom by reason of large and regular requirements of hemp, was lost in 1910 to France, the latter continuing to appropriate the greater part of the increasing output of copra.

Large quantities were marketed in all of the five great export staples except unmanufactured tobacco, which shows a slight decline, while increased average prices for the year prevailed in all except hemp. The increase in the output of hemp and cigars was large, while improved prices were very marked in the case of sugar and copra, and the favorable showing in the export trade that yielded the phenomenal increase of $8,870,606 for the year was brought about as the result of greater industrial activity and improved market conditions, in which the effect of free trade with the United States on the sugar and cigar industries was a leading factor.

Hemp production continued to increase heavily, and a new record in exports was established of 168,090 tons, as compared with 147,621 tons in 1909, the previous high-record year in the trade. But the low level of export prices reached toward the end of the fiscal year 1909 prevailed, with only minor fluctuations, throughout 1910, and the very low annual average shows a further decline from $107 to $104 per ton. This was offset, however, by increased production, which left a net gain of a million and a half dollars to the hemp trade. The total value of hemp exported was $17,404,922, or 44 per cent of all exports, and of this amount $10,399,397 worth found an American market. British purchases amounted to $5,458,131 and Australia was in the third rank, with but a value of only $284,602.

A steady advance in prices characterized the copra trade throughout the year, with an increase from 3 cents to 4 cents per pound between the opening and closing quarters and an annual average of over 3½ cents, as compared with 3 cents in 1909. The quantity also increased from 103,896 tons to 113,463 tons, resulting in a larger value by two and a half million dollars to the credit of the industry for the year. Copra is an export asset of the islands of growing importance and the total value of $9,153,951 in 1910 was 23 per cent of all exports. France was the largest purchaser and to a value of $6,114,324, with the great cocoanut-oil industry of Marseille largely dependent upon the Philippines for its supply of raw material. Spain and Germany were other leading markets, while a relatively small but growing American trade for several years past amounted to $447,145 in 1910.

Exports of sugar amounted to $7,040,690, and there was an increase to the benefit of the industry of $2,667,352. The quantity exported was 15,095 tons more than in 1909, but the favorable condition was due chiefly to prices, the annual average of which increased from 1½ cents in 1909 to 2½ cents in 1910. This was due to some extent to the higher prices prevailing in the sugar markets of the world during 1910, but was chiefly the result of free access to the large protected market of the United States, and represents the greatest benefit accruing to the islands under free trade. Exports amounted to 125,699 tons, but the increase is not so much the result of larger production as reduced exports in the previous year and the carrying over of stock in anticipation of free trade. Shipments of sugar to the United States amounted to 92,668 tons, or 74 per cent of the total, and the bulk of the balance went to the China-Hongkong market, which has heretofore been the leading consumer of the Philippine product. Thus in the first fiscal year under which free trade has operated somewhat less than a third of the three hundred thousand tons provided for by the legislation found an American market.

The effect of free trade was shown in the cigar industry, the export production of cigars reaching 196,192 thousand against 115,977 thousand in the previous year, an increase of approximately 70 per cent that was appropriated by the newly opened American market. The old and established trade of other countries as a whole remained practically unchanged, as will be seen from the following table, showing the export movement by, months before and after the new legislation became effective:

From these figures it appears that during this initiative period of the Philippine cigar into the American market exports somewhat exceeded half of the one hundred and fifty million limit fixed by Congress for free entry. Reference to the trade by months, however, fails to disclose any marked progressive increase pointing to a speedy reaching of the limit. With exports during the latter ten months of the year ranging from five to ten million per month, but without upward tendency, the future of the Philippine cigar in the United States would seem to be dependent on the further cultivation of and catering to the American taste. The value of exports to the United States was $1,906,447 out of a total of $2,973,630, and the result of the first year of free trade was nearly two million dollars to the export advantage of the cigar industry. The average price in the United States trade was approximately $23 per thousand, while that to other countries was $9.50. In the million-dollar trade to other countries, the China-Hongkong market took more than a third, while Australia, British East Indies, and the United Kingdom were other leading consumers.

With the largely increased demand for cigar leaf in the local manufacturing industry there was an advance in the price and a reduction in the quantity of leaf tobacco exported. Shipments declined from 23,561,853 pounds to 21,790,008, while the average price advanced from 7 cents to 7½ cents with a net reduction in value of $42,525. Leaf exports amounted to $1,619,744, with Spain the leading purchaser, as in the past, and credited with a value of $1,106,248, while Austria-Hungary took most of the remainder. But $2,176 worth was shipped to the American market.

Among the minor products of the islands the most noteworthy feature is to be found in the hat trade, which increased from $168,522 to $290,356, and shows the effect of free entry to the United States upon an industry well adapted to Philippine conditions. The Philippine hat has heretofore found highest favor in France, but under free trade American purchases covered the considerable increase for the year, grew in value from $23,411 to $122,320, and almost equaled those of France.
